

'Big Oil' Topic of Public Affairs Forum Meeting

Alameda Sun, Friday January 4, 2008

Antonia Juhasz will talk about "Breaking Down Big Oil: How The Industry Works and How To Stop It From Driving War, Destroying Our Planet, and Decimating Our Democracy," at the January meeting of the Alameda Public Affairs Forum. The event takes place at the Alameda Free Library, Conference Rooms A and B, 1550 Oak St., from 7 p.m. to 9:30 p.m., Saturday, Jan. 12.

The event is open and free to the public. Donations are accepted at the door; no one is turned away.

Antonia Juhasz is an activist, policy analyst, and author of a book, The Bu$h Agenda: Invading the World, One Economy at a Time (HarperCollins).

She is a fellow at Oil Change International and a visiting scholar at the Institute for Policy Studies.

Her opinion pieces and articles regularly appear in numerous publications, including the New York Times, International Herald Tribune, and Los Angeles Times and she is a frequent television and radio commentator.

Her new book, which she says breaks down exactly how Big Oil exercises its power over the economy and our democracy and what we can do to break its hold, regain control of our environment and stop wars for oil, will be published in 2008.

She is a committed activist in the peace and global justice movements. www.TheBushAgenda.net, www.PriceOfOil.org

The Alameda Public Affairs Forum, a project of the Center for Global Peace and Democracy, presents informative, engaging and educational speakers covering issues critical to Alameda, the nation and the world.

CDs of all previous forums can be ordered, and news of upcoming events obtained, via the Web site, www.alamedaforum.org.

For more information, contact Arthur Lipow, Alameda Public Affairs Forum director, at 814-9592 or alamedapublicaffairs@comcast.net.